FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Yakima Valley Farm Workers Clinic And Astria Toppenish Hospital Reach New Agreement

Toppenish – Effective March 6th, 2022, Yakima Valley Farm Workers Clinic OB providers will again deliver babies at Astria Toppenish Hospital. Under this new partnership, many challenges surrounding hospital coverage have been addressed.

"This is a happy and unexpected turn of events," said Christy Trotter, Yakima Valley Farm Workers Clinic Interim CEO. Brian Gibbons, Astria Health President and CEO, added, "we are pleased to be able to come together and envision better solutions for the community."

"After last year's separation, new conversations and opportunities came to light," Trotter stated. OB providers at Yakima Valley Farm Workers Clinic will now be joined by Astria OB providers and private OB providers to cover on-call services for the community. "We have created a strategy that benefits everyone," added Cathy Bambrick, Astria Toppenish Hospital Administrator.

Dr. Patricia Hernandez, a Yakima Valley Farm Workers Clinic practitioner in Toppenish for over 30 years, stated, "One of the greatest parts of my job is being able to deliver generations of babies, and I'm glad we can continue to provide OB care to all our families."

Trotter toured the hospital in late February. In a follow-up correspondence, she said, "we all look forward to a stronger hospital in our community." The renewed partnership will allow women who prefer to deliver in Toppenish to do so.
